2019 HEALTHY HOUSING SUMMIT

Beginning a New Discussion

WHAT IS HEALTHY HOUSING?

Healthy housing is critical for the growth of the community and involves a variety of housing strategies including new building stock, access to transit opportunities, environmental resiliency, and housing for young professionals and seniors who are significantly represented on Staten Island.

- Staten Island is rapidly growing with nearly half a million residents
- The population is oriented towards young professionals and millennials
- There is a need to transition from traditional single family suburban housing to smaller, flexible spaces along transit corridors and within high density commercial areas to attract and retain young professionals
- A "Healthy Housing" plan will include SIEDC working with developers to create shovel-ready projects based on:
 - Advanced site review and selection
 - Policy and zoning improvements
 - Properly trained staff
 - Effective partnerships
 - Support from elected officials
